All over the State are men coming before the people appealing for their support in the canvass upon the base hobby of readjustment. These men wish to have a seat in the legislative halls of Virginia.

Why do they wish this seat? For its honor? If they promote the work of repudiation, and disgrace the people they may represent, is there any honor for them? If no honor, then is it for money they serve? If they love the people so dearly as to aid them in repudiation, then why may not their own salary or per diem be repudiated? Nay, there is to be honesty among thieves. A counives at the rascality by which B and C rob D; then of course A is to be paid. But if the present spirit of repudiation is kept rife who can say that there will be money in the treasury to pay even the bold leader of a shameless van of freebooters. The General Assembly has been paid sometimes out of money borrowed of Richmond bankers, but will bankers lend money to pay a body of men whose BOOTS, SHOES & BROGANS | ers lend money to pay a body a body and all the daily aim is to repudiate the State's obligations? But readjustment, which is only a Mahonetic But readjustment, which is only a mahonetic and all the term for repudiation, cannot win, and all the agitation and shameful bustle about the State debt is only to blind the voting masses and open the way for some pitiable demagogues to pass into office. The paltry praters about "tax burden," if they have any sense, know very well that readjustment cannot accomplish the relief of the tax payer, and however dark and ignorant they may be, they are thereby the less qualified to enter upon the gigantic work of readjusting the affairs of a great State. Good people! listen to them no longer; rid yourself of agitators. Vote down all men, whether your neighbor or not, who propose your dishonor. Teach these petty harpers of low discord as our Saviour did :- "Get thee behind me.

Look around you and see who is talking of readiustment. We venture to say that nine men out of ten who advocate readjustment are insolvent and do not pay twelve shillings a year towards the

Again, look about you and see how good debt payers are situated. Are they not generally and always well to do? Look to those who evade their debts, dodge into bankruptey and otherwise trick and cheat, and we venture they are hard run for comforts, have few friends who are willing to trust them. So it should be and always will be either with an inwe had made a good fight and felt proud that Virginia had held the post of honor-that she had bared her bosom to the brunt of battle and the scourge of war. You were proud that, though you had lost property and life, you had honor left. But to our humiliation there arose some office-seckers who pandered to the negro vote and the radicals sent among us by the North, who did all in the power of their scheming nature to drag Virginia down into the dust,

Now this same set of office-seekers have raised a new cry and beguiled into their support a new class of followers, who are bent up on making the Old Mother-our yet glorious Virginia-eat "crow." Fie, fie-shame be to such men. Let us go to work and teach them that we yet feel proud of the honor we have left, and though we have lost and are yet poor we still have honor and mean to maintain it .--

FRENCH COOKERY .- In presence of the coming exhibition, that overywhere in France a thousand circumstances attest the hurlyburly of preparations, much effort is being made to stimulate exertions to secure the place of honor for French cookery. Many hotels and restaurants are seeking new chefs do cuisine in the provinces -and with success. It is carelessness, not the want of ability, that of late years has caused reflections to be cast on French cookery. Here it is a laborious art, which may explain, according to Lady Morgan, why the male sex are largely relied upon, in consequence of their strength. During the reign of Louis XVIII-a monarch who like all the Bourbons, possessed an "unbounded stomach"-the highest lady in the land practiced cooking, as there was no kitchen literature

The Duchesse d'Angouleme prepared most appetizing little dishes for her royal uncle, with very few materials, the receipts for which appears for materials are receipts for which appears for materials are receipts for which appears for materials to be a receipt for which appears for materials are receipts for which appears for materials are receipted for the last tiege. pear to have been refound during the last tiego of Paris. In the salons the highest ladies dis-coursed upon cookery, as their descendants now do upon chiffons; a young lady felt proud to be able to make a tempting dish, or to order a dinner. The Countesse Du Cayla, whose white hands were celebrated as the most beautiful in France, relied on her housekeeping as one of the means to reach the witty king's heart. The cutlets ala Maintenen were not strangers to the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The Queen of theba is reported to have influenced Solomon by the spices and essences she employed in her dishes; and there are abbesses who are said to have been canonized for their skill in pastry. Under Charles IX pastry cooks had the exclusive privilege of baking bread and singing at mass

THE CENTRE OF VITALITY. - The life of the flesh and the brain, the bonez and the musclas, is the blood. It is the centre of vitality, the nutriment of the system Not only must it be pure, but rich, in order to retain health.
